Off on Vacation

Theo and Mom packed for a vacation at the beach. “It will be an adventure!” said Theo. They rode a bus to the train station. The station was big and loud, and people rushed past in every direction. In all the confusion, Theo had a question. “Which train is ours?” Mom checked the tickets. “I am not sure,” she said. Lots of trains were lined up, and each one went to a different place. Then Theo found a big departure board with the train times on it. “Mom, look! The beach train leaves from track nine at ten.” Mom smiled. “Good job paying attention!” They hurried to track nine and got on just in time. With a jolt, the train began to move. Theo pressed his nose to the window and watched the green pastures zipping by. “What is the next part of our adventure?” he asked. “Sand, waves and ice cream,” said Mom. Theo grinned. The Stormy Sea

Ivy wanted to be an artist. For the town art show, she painted a sailor on a ship. The sailor had a reddish beard and a bluish hat. But the art show was on a windy, rainy day. Ivy ran to the show with her painting, but the rain got on it. The blue sky dripped into the sea, and the sailor's hat got blurry. Now the painting was messy and grayish, with drips running down it. Ivy slumped on a bench, full of sadness. An old artist with a cane stopped to look at the painting. “What a stormy sea!” she said. “I can feel the wind and the darkness. Your sailor is so brave.” Ivy looked again, and the artist was right. She hung her painting up with the rest. Lots of visitors stopped to look at the stormy sea. Ivy thanked the old artist for her kindness. “Someday, I will paint a real storm,” said Ivy, grinning.

The Missing Triangle

Leo had an important job in the school concert. He was part of a trio, and he played the triangle. The trio wore matching uniforms with silver buttons. On concert day, Leo jumped with excitement. Then he opened his case, and the triangle was not in it! “This is terrible!” said Leo. “Where can it be?” Dad helped him look all over the apartment. They checked under the sofa, next to Leo's bicycle and down in the basement. The triangle was not visible anywhere. Then Leo's little sister skipped past with her toy unicorn. The triangle was hanging on its horn! Leo and Dad looked at it in amazement, and then they laughed. It was not possible to be mad at a unicorn. They rushed to the school and got there with a minute to spare. Ding, ding, ding! The triangle rang out, clear and bright. At the end, the crowd clapped, and Leo took a bow with his trio.
